THE DAYS NUMBERED

Not Those of the World but the Allentown Food Exposition.

WHICH IS A LITTLE WORLD

A Busy Day Yesterday--$49.95 to the Hospital Fund Through Red
Tickets -- Miss Cross Tells
How to Prepare Chicken.

People have become so accustomed to wending their way to the Food Exposition that unless there is a red-ticket day to swell the multitudes one will find a good crowd there any time of the day or evening. Yesterday was no exception. The management is untiring in their efforts to please, and succeeds admirably.

There were 333 red tickets sold for admission on Monday, netting $49.95 for THE MORNING CRITIC hospital fund.

As usual Miss Cross' lecture was a feature and it was impossible for all to gain admission who were anxious to hear her.

FOOD SHOW DETS.

Benjamin Saylor, of B. & J. Saylor, Reading, and who is also chairman of the Executive Committee of the Reading Food Exposition, came over from his city to see the Allentown Exposition Monday. He was delighted with the beauty of the displays.

One of the most popular of the cooking booths is that of the Holan Mountain Buckwheat, where the deft William Payne, attired in snowy white and immaculate shirt, mixes and cooks delicious griddle cakes and disburses them to the many ladies eagerly waiting a test. These goods are making a "hit" in this market.

D. J. Harris, Pennsylvania agent for the Worcester Salt Co., came up from Philadelphia Monday and remained over, admiring their Cleopatra's Needle of salt, until yesterday. Mr. Harris is a polished gentleman of courtly manners and has a keen sense of the humorous side of life. He is a "hustler" in the salty ways and disposes of lots of "salt that is not salt."

Mrs. Emma Goff, one of the brightest of demonstrators, and who is with Rumford, is slightly ill at her hotel, the American.

W. A. Arnold is to furnish a turkey dinner to the management and employes of the exposition while at Reading next week.

Manager Buckley is contemplating a trip to Australia after April 10, 1895, when his present series of expositions close. If he likes the outlook he will hold a number of Food Expositions in that antipodean land next summer; or, rather, winter, for the seasons are reversed there.

Representative Cooke, of the Benschop booth, was selling Catasquans yesterday.

THE RED CRITIC

It is Always Read.

From the Easton Express.

THE ALLENTOWN CRITIC was issued on flaming red paper to-day. It might be said that THE CRITIC is always read, or something like that, but the opportunity for punning will not be accepted by the Express though the opening is tantalizing.

It Did Not Suggest Blood, But Red Ticket Day.

From the South Bethlehem Star.

THE ALLENTOWN CRITIC, which is making a noble effort to secure funds for the erection of a hospital in that city, appeared this morning in a brilliant red dress. Whether the color is intended to be suggestive of the blood flowing from the wounds of victims who will obtain aid at the coming Allentown hospital, we know not, but hospitals are certainly suggestive of gore.

An Excellent and Creditable Morning Paper.

From the Reading Eagle.

THE ALLENTOWN CRITIC is out this morning printed on red paper. THE CRITIC is an energetic worker for a local hospital fund, and red tickets cut from their paper will advance the receipts of the fund. Kirt DeBelle is manager and Charles W. Weiser editor of THE CRITIC. These gentlemen are making a most excellent and creditable morning newspaper for the Lehigh Valley, and their efforts are deservedly appreciated, as THE CRITIC appears to be a gratifying success.

J. D. Flynn and Mr. Bartick, two exhibitors at the Philadelphia Food Exposition, came to Allentown Sunday and yesterday secured spaces in our Food Exposition and opened up for business.

President Brugh, of the Columbia Milling Co., went home to Columbia for a Sunday rest. He is selling large quantities of his flour here.

Peters & Jacoby's ice cream soda fills in the pauses in the music like a missing chord in a symphony.

THE CRITIC HOSPITAL FUND

Following are the contributions to date:
