A FIRM'S LIBERAL OFFER

Missimer & Hoffman Will Do Something for the Hospital.

Will Do the Wiring for Electric Appliances and Furnish the Bells —
No Restrictions as to the Size of the Building.

Missimer & Hoffman, the electricians, make an exceptional offer towards building the new hospital for Allentown. They say they will wire the building throughout to each gas outlet, with switches and everything complete for electric lights and call bells. As the matter of electric wiring forms an important part in buildings these days, and as any well-equipped hospital needs all these things, the offer must be considered a very liberal one. They make no exception to the size of the building and are willing to do their work without pay.

They are expert electricians and the character of their work speaks for itself. This enterprising firm sets an example to others in different lines, and this also shows that when the building of the hospital is once practically started there will be no trouble to secure the materials to build it. The cost of wiring a house varies from $40 to $100, and these figures show that the offer of Missimer & Hoffman is no small item, and will amount to a number of shares that are to be raised on Friday evening. Next Friday evening's public meeting in the Court House should be attended by everybody interested in the hospital. Who will be the next to keep the good work going?
