Keep Up the Hospital Boom.

Allentown must have a hospital and we believe Allentown will have one. The city has gone without a place to take the sick and injured long enough. We can no longer be dependent on St. Luke's. A city with a population of 35,000 is large enough to support at least one hospital. Many towns considerably smaller have two. Now that interest in the matter has been revived it will not do to let it die out as on previous occasions. But we do not believe that such will be the case. It took the people of Allentown a long time to realize the necessity of having a hospital, but we believe that they are so thoroughly aroused that they will not permit the project to fall through again.

There are many things Allentown needs, but the hospital comes first. Keep up the boom.
