PRELUDE

Through the generosity of Hon. Edward Harvey, the Nurse's College was founded for the purpose of educating young ladies to become professional nurses. The instruction aims to prepare them for professional nursing in such branches as school nursing, municipal nursing, social service, hospital nursing, and other fields of nursing work, which embraces the prevention and spread of disease. Besides preparing them for professional work this education is so arranged that in case of matrimony, they will become better mothers of families which is the foundation of a greater nation. It is a profession which offers any woman an opportunity of lifting herself into a new field of work. Few positions are open to women in other lines of earning a livelihood which, in point of salary and opportunity for advancement, offers greater inducements than those in the various hospitals and training schools of our country. At present the demand for well trained nurses is much greater than the supply. Requests are constantly made for well educated nurses who are organizers and can awaken public interest and secure support and co-operation for the institution which employs them.

In this progressive age, a nurse is engaged not merely for the purpose of bringing a glass of fresh water or to make the bed comfortable or to be a companion for the patient, but she is employed for the purpose of aiding the physician professionally. She is expected to be constantly on the lookout for the danger signals and to keep an accurate account and record of such symptoms as may appear during the absence of the attending physician. This will enable him to avert the disease indicated by those symptoms.

EDWARD HARVEY MEMORIAL COLLEGE FOR NURSES

The Nurse’s College was founded thru the philanthropy of Hon. Edward Harvey, long the President of the Board of Trustees, who bequeathed to the Hospital a third of his residuary estate amounting to over $100,000. The college was dedicated on Thursday afternoon, December 23, 1915. The dedication addresses were delivered by Hon. William Howard Taft and Prof. J. Chalmers DaCosta, M.D., L.L. D.

With the opening of this building, Allentown began to lead in facilities for the training of nurses. This school is distinctive in many ways and particularly advantageous to girls of moderate means who could never hope for development or higher education through any other source.

The College building is four stories and 190 x 50. The architecture is English collegiate and the exterior of rough texture buff bricks with limestone trimmings. It is located in the heart of a spacious lawn and surrounded by four large streets. Every room is an outside room attractively furnished for the comfort of the nurses. The ground floor contains a gymnasium, a room for demonstrations in bandaging, splinting and plaster cast work and another room for instructions in practical nursing. It also contains a practical demonstration room for the study of dietetics, a dining room, kitchen, pantry, laundry, sewing room, trunk and store room.

The first floor contains the Memorial reception hall, which has a Tennessee marble wainscot reaching almost to the ceiling upon which are fastened three large bronze tablets containing the names of the donors of the furnishings. On this floor are the auditorium with its stage and side rooms, the reception parlors and the library, all luxuriantly finished and furnished. The second and third floors are taken up with suites for the nurses. The suites (two bedrooms and bath) are arranged for the accommodation of four nurses to a suite. Each room contains two clothes closets and a full length mirror in the door leading to the bath. The dressers and desks are arranged for two students with separate Yale locks. The building is of fire-proof construction with spacious halls throughout. All the floors are of terraza excepting the bathrooms which are of tile and have marble wainscot. The building throughout is complete in its appointments for the health and comfort of the nurses.

MEMORIAL RECEPTION HALL.
The Allentown Hospital Training School for Nurses was opened in 1899 and is registered in the State of Pennsylvania, making all graduates eligible for State Board examinations leading to the degree of R.N. Through its connection with the Allentown Hospital, a large staff of physicians and surgeons is available to provide instruction in Medical and Scientific subjects. The Allentown Hospital was founded and chartered on February 6, 1893, but was not ready to receive patients until May 23, 1899. The capacity then was 28 patients. Today it has facilities for handling over 200 patients. The improvements in progress will shortly provide for 300 beds. The hospital has surgical, medical, obstetrical, pediatric, orthopedic, contagious and infectious, genito-urinary, X-ray, pathological, bacteriological, social service, and dietetical departments to which each student is assigned for a period of practical nursing. In the training school the scientific part of nursing is taught and the theories put to practice in the Allentown Hospital. These conditions assure students of the school a course of instruction which is of the highest order and meets the desires of those aiming for higher professional training, and educates women to be thoroughly competent in the practice and theory of nursing in all its branches.

Ample provision has been made in the college building for teaching facilities. The large auditorium is used for class room work and for lectures to the student body. Separate rooms have been provided for practical demonstrations in bandaging, splinting, and plaster cast work, and another room for instructions in practical nursing. There is a large up-to-date Dietetic laboratory as well as separate laboratories for chemistry and bacteriology. The Training School today offers all the advantages and opportunities needful for an earnest, energetic young woman seeking to prepare herself for this most lucrative and important life work.
