APC Update: What’s Behind the Co-Signature Requirement for NPs?

With the go-live of Epic, a number of individuals have questioned why the system requires co-signatures of the collaborating/supervising physician for NPs. While is it correct that the NP scope of practice under the law does not require a co-signature, there are still a number of insurance carriers that have this requirement for payment under their coverage.

As there is really no way to write an algorithm in Epic software to recognize which insurance plan the patient is under, the plans in which the group providers participate, etc., it was agreed to continue the co-signature process in the old CE system when regulations were changed to eliminate the need for NP/physician co-signatures. This decision was discussed at the APC general membership meeting and endorsed by the APC Executive Council for its practical reasons.

LVHN always has had a pro-APC culture and is desirous of permitting APCs to exercise their full scope of practice under the law where feasible within LVHN. This simply is a current solution to assure the practice groups receive their appropriate reimbursement under all insurance plans.
This issue will be discussed at the next APC Executive Council meeting to strategize what, if any, pressures may be brought upon those insurance plans that still have this dated requirement.

If you have any questions regarding this issue, please contact Wendy Prutsman, CRNP, president, Advanced Practice Clinicians or John Hart, senior vice president, Medical Services.
Purple Is the New Orange: Welcome Biosimilars

When talking about biologic medications, what is the first thing that comes to mind? Efficacy? Complex diseases? Quality of life? Patients with conditions including rheumatoid arthritis, anemia, inflammatory bowel disease and many forms of cancer are able to live close to normal lifestyles thanks to the advent of biologics. In the next several years, a few of these drugs will be going off-patent. This allows pharmaceutical companies to develop their own copies of the originator, aptly named “biosimilars.” These biosimilars are the new hot topic in the world of pharmacy.

What are biosimilars?

Per the FDA, biosimilars are comparable compounds to an already approved biologic product with no clinically meaningful differences to that product. Additionally, these medications must work the same way in the body, be administered the same way, and have same
So, they are generics?

These medications are not considered generic versions of the reference product. Generic medications are small molecules with the exact same chemical structure of the originating medication. Biologics have an extensive development process that includes using living cells to manufacture the drug molecule, then extracting and purifying the molecule.

Due to the complex development of each batch of medication, the FDA put into place a process for demonstrating biosimilarity. Manufacturers must research and develop the manufacturing process, conduct animal studies, and conduct at least one human study to show safety and efficacy to the original product.

What's on the horizon?

In March 2015, the first biosimilar medication was approved by the FDA. Called Zarxio, it is biosimilar to Neupogen, which is used to treat neutropenia during chemotherapy and other conditions. Medications going off-patent in the next several years include Humira, Novolog, Remicade and Rituxan.

Financial impact

A small-molecule generic medication can cost an estimated $5 million and take three to five years to develop. In contrast, due to the extensive process of developing biologics, costs can be $100 million to $200 million or more and it can take 10 years. Biosimilars will have an estimated price of 70 percent to 85 percent of the reference product. Although there will be a slight discount, these products will still cost thousands of dollars per year for treatment.

The Purple Book is the FDA’s official list of licensed biologics and biosimilars – analogous to the FDA’s Orange Book of therapeutic equivalence.

New generics:

(regular not biosimilars)

- Megace ES 625mg/5mL suspension 150mL: Megestrol
- Namenda 5 and 10mg tablets: Memantine

Timely remittance of dues is both requested and appreciated. Payment may be made either by check or credit card. Again this year, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover credit cards will be accepted. If you wish to pay by credit card, click on the link included in your invoice or go to the home page of the Medical Staff Services website and select the appropriate link.
